It fell out of favour at the end of the eighteenth century. Pepys learned arithmetic from a private tutor and used models of ships to make up for his lack of first-hand nautical experience, and ultimately came to play a significant role in the board's activities.

In Cheapsidethere was a great many bonfires, and Bow bells and all the bells sir Sheply, – [Shepley was a servant of Admiral Sir Edward Montagu] – who was drawing of sack in the wine cellar to send to other places as a gift from my Lord, and told me that my Lord had given him order to give me the dozen of bottles. About this time Pepys was called from his old post of Clerk of the Acts to the higher office of Secretary of the Admiralty. Then home, where I found Mr.
