To his many detractors, Joseph Stalin was a monster on an epic scale who sent millions of "class enemies" to their graves. Her young husband was a thin dark figure with black eyebrows and moustaches, always sporting a black Circassian coat, tightly belted, a peaked cap and baggy trousers tucked into high boots.

Many conversations were had, arm twisted, everything that could have been. Jughashvili was upset when he learned that Keke had enrolled Ioseb in school, instead hoping his son would follow his path and become a cobbler. It seems unlikely she meant it literally—or was she trying to tell us something? Point 1A: treason.
